PEONY LIST. SEASON 1933.

KENWOOD IRIS GARDENS.

11 Sycamore 7496.

Montgomery and Euclid Roads,

R.R. #10, Cincinnati, Ohio.

For over 10 years we have grown irises, and specialized in them. During this period an interest in peonies developed, as they bloom about the same time, from the middle of May to the middle of June. The appeal of a peony is different from that of an iris. The latter has a more ethereal beauty, with very brilliant and subtle color combinations. The color range of the peony is limited in comparison to that of an iris, but the size and form of the flower reflects a hardiness and robustness, that has won many admirers. The pleasing fragrance of many peonies is also an asset. The combination of iris and peonies makes an effective contrast in garden plantings.

In compiling this list, every effort has been made to make it accurate and comprehensive, avoiding lengthy descriptions, yet emphasizing the essential points to be considered in the selection of varieties. Strong healthy 3 to 5 eye divisions will be sent out in September and October. Cultural directions are sent with each order.

TERMS: Prices on all roots include transportation charges. We reserve the stock, if 25% of the amount is sent with order, the balance to be paid on delivery. A discount of 5% will be allowed on all orders of $5.00 and over, if order is accompanied by remittance in full. Please order early, as advance orders receive first attention.

EXPLANATION of SYMBOLS: In order to condense, and still present the important points, certain symbols have been placed at each listing.

The SEASON of BLOOM is indicated by the letters E. M. and L. placed before the variety, and represents the time of bloom, whether early, midseason or late.

The RATING given by the American Peony Society in a recent symposium, is represented by the figures placed after the name. These ratings, compiled on a basis of 10 as a perfect flower, express in figures - thus, AVALANCHE 8.7 - the average of the votes on the different varieties, and reflect in a fairly accurate way, the relative merit of the flowers.

The LANDSCAPE VALUE is shown by a star(*) placed before the name of the variety. Many of the finest and most lovely peonies need support when they bloom, or are of slow growth. A number of varieties producing heavy or very compact flowers are in the latter class. All of them are splendid for cutting or exhibition, but only free flowering varieties with strong stems, are suitable for landscape plantings. Most of the Singles and Japs are fine for this purpose, and this accounts for their continued popularity.

The TYPE of the FLOWER follows the ratings. The following descriptions explain the diff. types:

SINGLE: A single row of wide guard or outer petals, with a center of yellow pollen bearing stamens.

SEMI-DOUBLE: Several rows of wide petals, and a center of stamens and petaloids.

JAPANESE: Wide guard petals as in the single type, but the stamens & anthers are greatly enlarged into narrow, thick petaloids of various colors, tipped with a vestige of yellow.

ANEMONE: Resembles the Japanese type, having wide guard petals. The globular center is filled with narrow incurved petaloids without tips of color.

CROWN: Wide petals are developed in the center of the flower, forming a high crown, around which narrow, short petals form a ring or collar. The guard and center petals are often of one color, the collar of another or of a lighter shade.

BOUQUET: The next step, in which the center petals are uniformly wide approaching the guards, but different from them, forming a globe shaped or incurved center without a collar or crown.

SEMI-ROSE: All of the petals are uniformly wide, but are loosely built, with a few pollen bearing stamens visible, or nearly concealed.

ROSE: The process of doubling is completed, all stamens are fully transformed into evenly arranged wide petaloids, similar to the guards, forming a perfect rose shaped bloom. Some of the two last types have straight petals forming a even or flat line on top, others are incurved or cup shaped, forming a globular type of flower.
